Suggestions and tips

- ✓ Trauma pads are larger absorbent bandages available at many drugstores; feminine napkins are an expensive substitute.
- ✓ Surgical scrubs and disinfectant solutions are often better for cleaning wounds than hydrogen peroxide. Chlorhexidine (nolvasan) is usually non-irritating, and the solution may be used in the ear, and the mouth. Keep out of eyes.
- ✓ Saline eye wash without preservatives can be used to clean wounds as well as rinse dirt and chemicals from eyes
- ✓ Some pet approved anti-diarrheal and pain medications are available over the counter at pet stores or at your veterinarian. Be sure to read and follow the directions.
- ✓ This first aid has had good reviews: Pet First Aid—Cats and Dogs by Bobbie Mammato, DVM, MPH
- ✓ Collapsible bowls can make packing the 72 hr. kit easier
- ✓ The amount of water and food will depend on the size and health of your pet. A small dog or cat may only need a quart of water; a large dog could need a gallon or more.
- ✓ A shirt or gift box that collapses flat plus a bag of cat litter will work for a litter box. Use the plastic bag to line the box. Bring 3 separate bags of litter; put just enough in each to provide a 1-2 inch layer in the box. Change the box daily.
- ✓ Use a ziplock bag and plastic bags can be used for protecting records, cleaning up your pet's waste, and many other things.
- ✓ Small packets of pre-moistened wipes that are made for babies are a great addition.

- ✓ Make-up kits and toiletry kits work well for holding the first aid supplies, and there are often small bottles included that can be used for the various liquids; a large heavy duty ziplock will also work. Make sure everything is labeled with a permanent marker
- ✓ Include used toys and bedding so your pet has something familiar.
- ✓ Totes, plastic buckets and gym bags make good containers for holding the kit.
- ✓ Make sure your pet has a tag with your name and phone number and/or is microchipped
